How "Dental Pulp" May One Day Restore Vision!

You probably don't pay much attention to the amazing inner workings of your living teeth. But researchers at the University of Birmingham sure do!

They're interested in how "stem cells" taken from the nerve center of human teeth can be used to reverse nerve damage linked to vision loss!

The focus is on the use of stem cells from dental pulp, the inner portion of the tooth that houses nerves and blood vessels.

Why "Dental" Stem Cells?

For one thing, they're easily isolated from children's and adults' lost or extracted teeth.

Also, dental stem cells share properties with bone marrow stem cells, which have been found to have great potential for tissue regeneration.

A leading cause of blindness is the loss of retinal nerve cells and ultimate cell death.

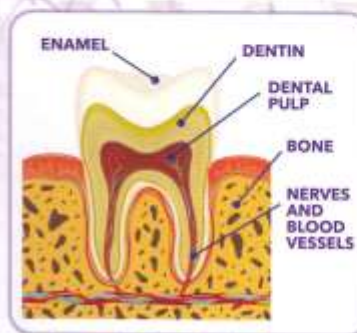

It can occur after a traumatic injury or with degenerative disease, such as glaucoma.

Researchers at the University of Birmingham confirmed that dental pulp stem cells can supplement the lost supply of nerve cells, guard against certain types of cell death, as well as to promote cell regeneration!

Hope for a Brighter Future!

The use of dental pulp cells to protect sensitive nerves of the eye is a relatively new development.

As the clinical application of current findings continues to be investigated, future dental pulp stem cell therapy appears to hold much promise! ❖

"The Latest Dental Advances Make All the Difference!"

by Gary Armstrong

My oral health has been restored and I love the results!

I met my Dentist in a networking group, as we are both small business owners.

I was comfortable with my Dentist even before I made my first appointment.

It had been a while since I had seen a Dentist and I knew there were going to be issues.

I was afraid they would judge me, instead I was treated in a respectful and non-threatening way.

My Dentist doesn't talk dental jargon and explains everything to me in ways I can understand.

One of the qualities that impressed me the most is they have the latest technology in their office!

They go above and beyond with their continuing education and are on top of the newest dental advances for their patients!

I am so happy with their work and professionalism. Their belief is, "better Dental care will enhance the community." ❖
